The Healthcare Administration and Interprofessional Leadership master’s program is an innovative graduate program that will provide healthcare administrators with opportunities to learn from expert faculty, to collaborate with interprofessional peers, contribute to their healthcare organization’s mission, and develop a network of colleagues committed to making healthcare accessible, affordable, and sustainable.

Graduates from the program, one of UCSF’s first online education programs, will gain new knowledge and competencies to reshape the future of healthcare. Students will study with UCSF’s highly esteemed, interprofessional faculty to achieve proficiency in health systems research, leadership, healthcare policy and economics, organizational complexity, business practices and management of social and human capital.

For more information about this program, please visit the program website at: healthleadership.ucsf.edu.[1].