Housing and Commuting

San Francisco is a world-class city, but it is no secret that it can be difficult to afford. Unless you are already established in the Bay Area, finding a place to live may be one of your biggest concerns as a student. Here are some resources that may help.

Campus Housing

Living on campus is often the best deal for students, especially when you first come to the Bay Area. Besides the generally lower cost and obvious convenience of living on campus, you will also not be burdened with having to connect utilities or establish internet service; you won't have to sign a long lease or pay large deposits; and you won't have to worry about finding roommates on your own. Even if living in campus housing is not appealing to you for the long-term, you may still find it much easier to live in campus housing temporarily, at least until you get a feel for San Francisco and other Bay Area cities and neighborhoods. Explore the options for living on campus [1].

Campus Life Services [2] at UCSF operates all campus housing facilities. Their website has many other resources for students and postdocs seeking housing including eligibility requirements, agreements and contracts, information about parking, renter's insurance, bicycle policy, accommodations for people with disabilities, and much more. The campus housing website [2] should be your primary source of information about living on campus!

Off-Campus Housing and Commuting

Visit the UCSF Campus Life Services website for many off-campus housing resources [3] in addition to on-campus options. If you can't find a place in San Francisco that you can afford, you may want to consider living in one of the other fine cities that make up the Bay Area. Many people fall in love with the unique character of these other areas, so you would be wise to keep an open mind about all options! Good public transportation systems (e.g. BART, CalTrain, and AC Transit) make it feasible for many students, postdocs, faculty, and staff to live outside the city, while still having reasonable commutes and keeping commuting costs down.

Things to bear in mind:

- There is a free UCSF shuttle [4] from the 16th St Mission BART [5] station to the UCSF
Mission Bay campus.
- The CalTrain [6] station on King Street is only about a 10-15 minute walk to Mission Bay.
- A wide system of bus services including Muni [7], AC Transit [8], SamTrans [9], and others connect San Francisco with the greater Bay Area.
- There is also ferry service [10] to San Francisco's Embarcadero from the East Bay cities of Alameda, Oakland, and Vallejo.
- Bicycles are allowed on BART, CalTrain, ferries, and many bus lines, and it's a short, flat ride from the Ferry Building to Mission Bay.
- UCSF also has a network you can tap into for car and vanpools [11].
- Visit 511.org [12] and use the trip-planner to see what the transportation options and commute times might be like for you if you decide to live outside San Francisco.
- Again, visit the Campus Life Services website for information about on and off-campus housing [2] possibilities.
- The most commonly used online resource for finding apartment rentals in the Bay Area is Craigslist.org [13]. (Craigslist is not affiliated with UCSF in any way.)

Remember to visit the Campus Life Services website for more information about housing and transportation to, from, and around UCSF! [14]
