The one-year, full-time Masters in Global Health Sciences program is designed for students and practitioners in health science professions or related fields (anthropology, sociology, geography, environmental studies, law, or international studies) who wish to acquire expertise and skills necessary for leadership roles in global health. The multi-disciplinary curriculum is taught by more than 70 University of California San Francisco (UCSF) and UC faculty, and includes an applied global health capstone project. Graduates are prepared for careers in research, policy, program management and evaluation, and academia.

UCSF Global Health Sciences is now accepting applications for Fall 2014. Application deadline: February 15, 2014

globalhealthsciences.ucsf.edu/education/graduate